Concept Note:

The concept of parliamentary democracy is very old and gradually has been popularized in all parts of the globe. This concept has been originated from England. After the end of the Second World War, most of the European colonies, especially British colonies had introduced parliamentary democracy with a liberal outlook. Later on, it has been proved that in most of the cases, the newly born Afro-Asian countries have failed to secure parliamentary democracy. Instead of this, despotism has formed in different manners. India got its independence in 1947 and adopted a parliamentary form of democracy. Today, India is considered as the largest democracy in the world. It is vibrant and almost successful. Although, India has been passing through a number of challenges, yet it is a unique example in the cotemporary world. Indo-centric region is known as Indian Sub-Continent, i.e.: South Asia. It comprises India, Pakistan, Bangladesh, Nepal, Bhutan, Sri Lanka, Maldives and Afghanistan. Pakistan and Bangladesh had experience of military regimes. Nepal has witnessed a long history of mass-movement for parliamentary democracy. Maldives has a long history of Presidential dictatorship. The Bhutan case is quite exceptional. The Himalayan Kingdom, has introduced parliamentary democracy in 2008. It was initiated by the King himself. It is a King Guided democracy. Afghanistan had gone through a long dark age in establishment of democracy. Significantly, not one of the Founding Fathers of the countries of South Asia ever advocated the presidential system for the country to adopt on its attainment of independence from British rule. Therefore, there are as an enormous scope to make an extended deliberation on a common platform of our National Conference on "Indo-Centric Parliamentary Democracy in South Asia: Retrospect and Prospect."
